QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. In a sexual harassment and retaliation case under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, has the Fifth Circuit and the lower court ignored or misapplied this Court's holding in Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc. 120 S.Ct. 2097 (2000)?

2. On Summary Judgement, did the lower courts violate the Seventh Amendment and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 when they classified retaliation plaintiff's into two categories: those that make a "truthful, sincere complaint" of discrimination and those that assertedly make "manipulative or insincere complaints" and deny Title VII's retaliation protection and the right to a jury trial to the latter?

3. Are Defendants entitled at the summary judgment stage to rely as a matter of law on a "good faith belief" defense, e.g. an assertion that it discharged a sexual harassment complainant based on a good faith belief that while she engaged in her protected oppositional activity she engaged in misconduct or made "misrepresentations" to the employer even if the employee asserts she engaged in no such misconduct?

4. Are material issues of fact raised as to the Company's liability for sexual harassment misconduct of its Manager when the Manager engages in a violent rape of the employee off-premises and then uses his managerial power to prevents her promotion by his conduct including his use of the Company's performance evaluation system?

4. In light of the grant of certiorari in National R.R. Passenger Corp. d/b/a Amtrak v. Morgan, U.S. No. 00-1814, cert. granted 6/25/01, to determine the applicability of the "continuing violation theory" is Plaintiff entitled to trial on all of her sexual harassment allegations including those occurring more than 300 days prior to her EEOC charge filing under a continuing violation "equitable estoppel" theory?

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. COURSE OF PROCEEDINGS

Plaintiff-Petitioner Jennis ("Kay") P. Harnish (Harnish) filed this action against American Airlines, Inc. (American) alleging, inter alia, unlawful sex and retaliation discrimination in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. [Title VII].

The United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division, the Honorable Judge Terry R. Means presiding, granted summary judgment. (A-3). Harnish timely appealed and the United States Court of Appeal for the Fifth Circuit, Judges Emilio M. Garza, Parker and Ellison (sitting by designation), upheld the trial court's decision by unpublished decision of June 6, 2001 thereby dismissing Harnish's claims without trial. The Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under 28 U.S.C. §1291.

B. BACKGROUND AND HIERARCHAL STRUCTURE OF DFW RAMP SERVICES:

Harnish was a twelve year employee of Respondent American Airlines. In January of 1995, she transferred to a Supervisor/CSTL position in Ramp Services at DFW Airport. (16:3866-3867). Alleged sex harasser Michael Hill was a Level 5 Shift Manager; he admits that he was one of Harnish' supervisors. (18:4413, 4350-4351, 4428-4428, 4433, 4443-4444). Other supervisors included Bill Wilkshire, Mike McKanna and Jerry Culp. Mark Mitchell was the Administrative Ramp Manger over the Shift Managers. (RE 56; 16:3866-3868, 3877; 19:4625). William Wallace, Jr. was American's Vice President at DFW Airport. (RE 70-71; 18:4484-

C. SEX DISCRIMINATION INCLUDING CONDUCT PRIOR TO 300 DAY CHARGE FILING PERIOD:

Harnish filed her EEOC charge on July 30, 1996. Her 300 day Title VII statute of limitations period commences on October 4, 1995. (18:4336; 19:4595). In early 1995, male workers including Mark Bowers made sexist statements and offensive sexual jokes. (17: 4203, 4206, 4208, 4210-4212). Employees also directed profanity and words of a sexual nature at her and referred to a certain female co-employee as having "crotch rash." (17:4204-4205, 4211-4212, 4214-4215).

Bowers also physically touched Harnish at work in an unwanted manner several times. On one such work occasion, Bowers jumped out from behind a cabinet and grabbed her wrist. (17: 4211-4212, 4229). Prior to October of 1995, Harnish estimates that she complained about twenty times to her supervisors that Bowers was harassing her. (17:4225, 4231; 18:4319) Manager McKanna's response to her complaints was just "deal with it." (17:4204-4206, 4211, 4222-4223, 4225-4226; 18:4319, 4456-4459). In the February to April, 1995 time period, Manager McKanna himself made sexual advances toward her which she opposed. (17: 4216-4218; 18: 4326, 4460-4463).

In May of 1995, Manager Wilkshire embraced her snugly and pulled her against his body. In April or May 1995, Manager Wilkshire commenced calling Harnish "the skirt," in a derogatory manner in "debrief meetings." He continued to call her the "skirt" through the statutory time period and up through June of 1996 even though she requested he not do so. (RE 56; 17: 4218, 4224-4225; 18:4257; 19:4625).

Other females also experienced sexual harassment on the ramp. According to Sally Samonek and Sharon Brooks Ruckner, female employees are subjected to lewd jokes and comments and sexually explicit pictures of naked or mostly naked females on the Ramp including drawings of male and female genitalia "all over fleet services." (RE 58; 19:4563-4567; 4627)

Manager Culp warned Harnish that Managers McKanna, Hill and Wilkshire were attempting to get her fired. She explained to Manager Culp that she had refused to have sex with McKanna. He told her, I knew they were bad but not this bad about it. (RE 56; 19:4625)

D. HARNISH FILES HER FIRST INTERNAL CHARGE OF SEX HARASSMENT; SEX DISCRIMINATION CONTINUES:

On September 16, 1995, after yet another Bowers incident, Harnish complained to Manager Wilkshire telling him that she wanted the conduct stopped.(17:4225-4226). On September 18, 1995, Harnish talked to Vice President Bill Wallace. She complained to him about sexual harassment but stated that she feared retaliation. Harnish asserts that Wallace told her he was aware that there was sexual harassment on the ramp. (RE 66; 17:4227-4228; 18:4486)

On September 19, 1995 Harnish filed a written sexual harassment complaint. Human Resources representatives promised Harnish that the investigation would be completed "expeditiously" and in ten days." In fact the investigation dragged on for four months. (RE 63; 17: 4228; 4242; 19:4537).

On November 3, 1995, Harnish opposed discrimination by complaining to Human Resource Managers Brickhouse and Merlino of sex differences in treatment and job assignments being conditioned upon sexual favors. (17:4237, 4239).

E. EMPLOYEE HARNISH IS SEXUALLY HARASSED IN THE STATUTORY PERIOD BY MANAGER HILL AND THEN RAPED BY MANAGER HILL ON DECEMBER 3, 1995:

Manager Hill's sexual conduct continued into the statutory 300 day period. Manager Hill made sexual advances towards Harnish in the October-November 1995 time period. At that time he was touching her, leaning into her and invited her to his house and hot tub several times. She found such sexual advances unwanted and declined the advances. (RE 58; 18:4304; 19:4627)

The Shift Managers invited their subordinates to socialize and drink with them as Manager McKanna admitted. On December 3, 1995, Shift Manager Hill and McKanna, then roommates, had invited their subordinate supervisors drinking and to their house. (18: 4350-4351, 4434, 4475-4476, 4478). That night Harnish was raped by Manager Mike Hill. (RE 58; 19:4627).

Managers Hill and McKanna had gone to a bar and spent the afternoon drinking with their subordinates supervisors including Harnish. (18:4352-4354). At the bar, Manager Hill treated her in an antagonistic manner and threw spit wads at her and in her beer. Hill asked her if she thought she was better than them. (18: 4275, 4293-4294).

Hill then asked the group to come to his house. Harnish objected and declined. Hill and McKanna were very insistent that she come; they did not take no as an answer. She feared that if she did not come, that she would be accused of not being social with the management and that it would affect her career. (18:4275 -4276, 4294-4296, 4355-4357, 4452).

At Hill and McKanna's house, Hill yelled at her and continued to be hostile towards her. A group including Harnish and Hill went dancing. On the ride back, Hill continued exhibiting anger at Harnish and began repeatedly hitting the back of her seat. Harnish stated, "What is your problem? Do you just want a blow job or what?" Harnish admits the comment made in anger but denies any oral sex physical activity. Passengers Rogstad and Majors have also consistently denied any oral sex activity. (18:4276-4277, 4297, 4300-4304, 4358-4363, 4367-4368, 4391; 19:4523, 4529-4534).

In contrast, with no support from any of the other witnesses, Manager Hill asserted in the subsequent sexual harassment investigation that Kay Harnish leaned over to the back seat, exposed his penis and gave him oral sex in the car in front of passengers Rogstad, Majors and Souter. (18: 4364-4366, 4369-4376, 4436-4437, 4451, 4522).

Returning to Hill's house, Harnish went into the bathroom. Hill entered uninvited. He approached her and kissed her. In her confusion, she initially kissed back but when he became more insistent she pushed him back and told him, "No, No" and "No, you need to stop." (18:4304-4306). Harnish struggled forcefully with him. He remarked, "You think you're too good." He hit her against the wall and threw her down to the floor. (18:4306).

She attempted to fight him off and again told him to stop. Hill overpowered her physically. She blacked out. He then proceeded to have sexual intercourse with her against her will. Later, when Harnish' friend Becky Rogstad went back to the bedroom area, she found Plaintiff sitting on the floor in a traumatized state, crying and rocking back and forth. (18:4306-4309, 4333;19:4524).[1]

After Hill left, Manager McKanna came into the room. Plaintiff, who was upset, threatened that "You think you can f--k anybody that's on the ramp." She told him, "You guys better leave me alone and never come near me again." She then stated, "And you're not going to get away with this." (18:4309, 4334,; 19:4524) Hill acknowledges McKanna told him that Harnish had threatened that she was going to sue American. (18:4387-4388, 4435) Harnish went to the hospital; the hospital report documents bruises, lesions and tears. (RE 84-86; 18:4310-4312, 4339, 4531, 4558-4568).

Three days later, Harnish confronted Manager Hill at a retirement party. She asked him, do you realize how bad you beat me? His response was "So, I had fun." That night, the male

[1] In contrast, Hill asserts that Harnish and he rolled around the floor in consensual foreplay and then had consensual sex after which time Harnish "looked relaxed and contented." (18:4379-4384, 4386, 4390).

Supervisors were bragging about Manager Hill's sexual conquests and he was laughing and agreeing with them. (RE 58; 18:4313; 19:4627)

Within six to seven days, Harnish became suicidal. She also feared for her physical safety and had fear of disease, as well as anger, loss of appetite and self confidence, nightmares, flashbacks, anxiety, nerves, lack of concentration, mental distraction, paranoia and feelings of being overwhelmed. (18:4283-4285, 4331-4332).

After the attack, an uneasy truce developed between Harnish and Managers Hill and McKanna. (RE 57; 19:4626). Harnish backed away from her prior threat to report Hill and McKanna because she feared for her personal safety and retaliation and feared for her job if she filed her complaint with the company and the EEOC. It also appeared to her that certain Managers were "untouchable." Further, she felt that American was ineffective in stopping sexual harassment after her prior experience and her knowledge of sexual harassment conduct against other employees of American. (RE 56-57, 61; 17:4245; 18:4272, 4479; 19:4602, 4625-4626, 4630).

F. POST RAPE-PRE DISCHARGE EVENTS INCLUDING DENIAL OF ASSIGNMENTS, INCOMPLETE PERFORMANCE EVALUATION AND DENIAL OF PROMOTABILITY RATING:

Harnish had requested from Manager Hill to go into other areas, including the LTS zone, Eagle zone and the "war room" which is the nucleus of the terminal operation. Experience there helps in promotability. Hill and McKanna never selected her for such assignments, choosing their buddies and those that they had gone out with instead. (18:4260,4337-4338, 4341-4342, 4344, 4473-4474). Manager Mitchell previously had recommended that Hill allow her to act as relief shift manager. Manager Hill refused to so assign her, however. One would need that experience to be a general manager in a smaller city or for any level 4 job in the Tower. (RE 59; 18:4263, 4337; 19: 4628).

In late June of 1996 Hill was selected for another position. At a farewell restaurant gathering, Harnish observed Hill's inappropriate sexual conduct. The next day in the work debrief session the employees were bragging about Hill's sex exploits. (RE 59; 18:4258-4249; 19:4628)

On June 20 or 24th, 1996, Hill gave her a performance review. He told her that it was his intention that she not be promoted. He had only rated her "3 S" and noted that she needed exposure to certain work areas - the same work areas that he had refused to which he had refused her assignment. The review was also incomplete which effectively lowered her score. (18: 4262-4263).[2] When Harnish complained about the review, Hill falsely told her it was "strictly internal" and would not affect her chances of getting a promotion outside of Ramp Services. She asked him to complete the review. He refused. (RE 59; 18:4262-4264; 19:4628). Harnish considered Hill's conduct retaliation towards her. (RE 59; 18:4267, 4266, 4466-4468; 19:4628). The "S" rather than "P" ranking forestalled her career; Hill admits that he cannot name anyone who was promoted who did not receive a "P" ranking.(RE 59-60; 18:4720, 4414; 19:4628-2629).

G. AMERICAN'S MANAGERS WARN HARNISH AGAINST FILING SEXUAL HARASSMENT COMPLAINTS AND THREATEN HER WITH RETALIATION;

Shift Manager Jerry Culp had told Harnish it was not a good thing to file harassment charges; that "American doesn't accept them." He told her that he'd known people that had been in

---

[2] Harnish had expected a rating of "3 P" based on her work performance, work ethic and statistical numbers. Further, in November of 1995, Mitchell had recommended that Harnish pursue a level 4 promotion and had told her in conversations that she was promotable, thus leading her to believe that she would receive a "P" (promotable) rating. (18:4267, 4263, 4267).

her situation and that it had ruined their careers and they'd gotten fired for it. (18: 3440).

After she had filed her Bowers complaint, Manager McKanna confronted Harnish about the sex harassment complaint. He told her: "I resent that. Nobody has done that before on the ramp and you will regret that." He told her it could damage her career. Harnish found McKanna's threat intimidating. (RE 55; 17:4233-4234; 18:4340, 4464-4465; 4624).

On October 10, 1995 Harnish had a meeting with Manager, Harnish discussed a request to change zones to get away from Bowers, the sexual harassment investigation and delay in that investigation. She told Wilkshire that she might have to hire an attorney relating to the investigation. She also complained to Wilkshire that he was treating her differently relating to shift swap polices. Wilkshire called her a liar and stormed out of the meeting. (17: 4232, 4235). Wilkshire also labeled Harnish a "troublemaker" on at least four occasions. (17: 4218-4220)

In June of 1996, she made an appointment to meet with Vice President O'Hare. (RE 64; 17:4036) The day before the meeting, Manager Wilkshire warned her that she needed to think twice about going to O'Hare. He told her that if she went to see Don O'Hare that that would be a decision that "could ruin a career." He also reminded her she could have a long healthy career at American but that going to see Don O'Hare was "not a smart move." (18:4339-4330).

H. HARNISH PROTESTS DISCRIMINATION AND FILES HER INTERNAL COMPLAINTS OF SEX AND RETALIATION DISCRIMINATION AGAINST MANAGER HILL:

On June 28, 1995, Harnish met with Vice President O'Hare and Human Resources Representative Barbara Landers. She complained that there was sexual harassment on the ramp that was not being addressed and that harassment and retaliation had her performance evaluation. (18:4270-4271).[3] She complained that the sexual harassment and retaliation had gotten worse. She further wanted to deal with the issues relating to Hill's rape before he was transferred so that he would not be allowed to prey on other females. She was further concerned about the affect of the evaluation on her career. (18:4268-4269).

During that meeting she sought assurances from O'Hare that if she went into details about the harassment and provided him documents would she be fired? He stated, "Absolutely not." She then complained of Hill's performance review: the fact that he was not following procedures, the lack of a "P" ranking and that he did not complete the review. Her discussion about the rape was brief. She showed O'Hare the hospital report. He looked at it but did not discuss it. She told O'Hare that Hill was trying to ruin her career and asked for the harassment and treatment to be stopped. (18:4272-4273).

I. AMERICAN CONDUCTS A BIASED INVESTIGATION INTO HARNISH'S ALLEGATIONS:

American conducted a lopsided and sexually biased investigation. The investigators interrogated Harnish twice for a total of over four and a half hours and the investigators threatened her with termination. (18:4321, 4323,4326-4327,4445-4450; 19:4528). In the interrogation, Investigator Shaver yelled at her and asked her invasive questions: he asked her about her sex life, her personal life, if she requested rough sex, if she undid Hill's belt or unzipped his pants. Shaver told her to make false statements on her written statement: he told her to write down that she liked kinky sex, that

[3] Although American had concluded the Bowers investigation in January, American had not advised Harnish of the result. Nor was additional training on sexual harassment given. It appeared to Harnish that nothing had been done. (RE 56-57, 61; 17:4245; 18: 4272, 4479; 19:4602, 4625-4626, 4630).

she liked rough sex, and that she had unzipped Hill's pants. the story, they told her, that is "not how it happened." She was intimidated and coerced at the investigation. (18:4339, 4343)

American's Investigators obtained statements from several witnesses including Hill, McKanna, Harnish, Rogstad and Majors. (18:4402). Male Managers Hill and McKanna testified that the investigators were "professional" and that he was not coerced. Shaver left Manager Hill alone to write his own statement; he was not threatened with discharge. Manager McKanna also testified that he was not coerced. (18:4392-4405, 4471; 19:4579-4581). Alleged eyewitnesses to the alleged oral sex incident, Rogstad and Majors, were interweaved and did not confirm Hill's story that an oral sex incident had taken place.

J. AMERICAN DISCHARGES KAY HARNISH AND GIVES CONFLICTING VERSIONS FOR ITS REASONS FOR SO DOING:

American discharged Harnish. Despite having the hospital report showing injury and bruising and the statements of disinterested witnesses contradicting Hill's account, discharging official Wallace testified that American concluded that the alleged rape incident did not take place and as to sexual harassment they "did not find." (RE 75-76; 18:4496-4497). The company discharge letter signed by a second official states that the discharge was due to "your judgment" in the matter recently investigated and the fact that "I have lost confidence in your ability to work effectively with other employees and be a 'positive role model' for your co-workers and subordinates." (RE 82; 18:4329, 4335; 19: 4610).

Discharging official Wallace's testimony, however, shifts the reasons stating that Harnish was discharged for dishonesty and for filing a report with "ulterior motives." (RE 67-68; 18:4489-4490). (RE 67-69, 71-72; 18:4489-4491, 4493-4494). He states that Harnish was terminated "for the judgment that she made and how she handled and documented this -- this case .... and that she is "not a very truthful person." (RE 68-71; 18:4490-4493).

At the EEOC, the company completely altered its reason for discharge. At that time, the company asserted that Harnish was discharged "based on the act of oral sex in public." American stated:

> Second, if Ms. Harnish had wanted to inform American that she had supposedly been raped by a co-worker .... she had the right to do so. She certainly would not have been discharged for making such an allegation. In fact, she was not discharged for making such an allegation. ... During the investigation, American learned that Ms. Harnish and Mr. Hill had engaged in oral sex in the presence of other persons in a vehicle traveling on a public road. This was the reason for Ms. Harnish's and Mr. Hill's discharges. (RE 80-81, 83-84; 19:4608-4609, 4612-4613)(emphasis supplied).

K. HARNISH FILES HER EEOC CHARGE AFTER HER DISCHARGE:

Harnish filed her EEOC charge on July 30, 1996, after her discharge. (RE 46-48; 18:4336; 19:4592-4599). Harnish filed her charge within 300 days of her discharge and the rape by Manager Hill. However the alleged 1995 sexual harassment by employee Bowers and Managers McKanna and Wilkshire fall outside the 300 day period. She did not file her EEOC charge earlier because she was afraid after receipt of the threats and warnings of Managers McKanna, Wilkshire, Mitchell and Culp as well as because of her negative experience with American's Bowers investigation. (RE 52-53, 61; 19:4621-4622, 4630). Further, she had been raped after her internal complaint of sex harassment on the ramp by a ramp Manager who had told her "you think you're too good" and you think you are "better than us." (RE 55, 60-61; 18:4275, 4293-4294; 19:4624, 4629-4630). After the rape she was afraid of Manager Hill and simply too afraid both for her physical safety and for her job to file such a charge during her period of employment. (RE 52-53, 66; 18:4486-4488; 19:4621-4622) Further, immediately after the rape she was suicidal and suffering extreme emotional distress. She could not risk her mental and emotional health as well as her job by filing an EEOC charge against American, (RE 53; 19:4622).

II. SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT:

A. In a Title VII Sexual Harassment and Retaliation Case, the Fifth Circuit and the Lower Court Ignored or Misapplied this Court's holding in Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc. 120 S.Ct. 2097 (2000):

1. The Reeves Holding:

In this Court's unanimous decision in Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 120 S.Ct. 2097 (2000), the Court reversed the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals' "pretext plus" burden of proof standard. In Reeves, this Court rearticulated that once a plaintiff establishes a prima facie case, and further submits evidences that the defendant's articulated reason for its employment decision is not to be believed, that such evidence alone is sufficient to permit the fact finder to infer discrimination. Id. at 8. As the court indicated "[i]n appropriate circumstances, the trier of fact can reasonably infer from the falsity of the explanation that the employer is disassembling to cover up a discriminatory purpose." Id. at 9.

Furthermore, this Court indicated that in determining whether summary judgment or judgment as a matter of law is proper, that all reasonable inferences must be decided in favor of the nonmoving party. Id. at 10. Therefore, this Court held the reviewing court should only give credence to the evidence favoring the nonmoving party, unless the evidence presented is from disinterested witnesses and it is uncontradicted and unimpeached. Id. at 10. This Court's instruction appears to have been wholly ignored herein.

In Reeves, this Court indicated that ".... it follows that the ultimate question of liability ordinarily should not be taken from the jury...." Id. at 12-13. This instruction also appears to have been wholly ignored herein.

The Reeves decision follows in the footsteps of this Court's decision in St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks, 113 S.Ct. 2742, 2749 (1993), which held that one way to present evidence of pretext is to demonstrate that the proffered reason is unworthy of belief:

> The factfinder's disbelief of the reasons put forward by the Defendant (particularly if disbelief is accompanied by a suspicion of mendacity) may, together with the elements of the prima facie case, suffice to show intentional discrimination .... no additional proof of discrimination is required.

Hicks, 113 S.Ct. at 2749.

2. Application of Reeves to the Instant Case:

While the district court made passing reference to the Reeves case, A-6, Petitioner respectfully asserts that the district court failed to apply its holding properly. The Fifth Circuit, in its unpublished opinion, (A-1,2), fails to mention and appears to ignore this Court's Reeves holding entirely. No serious effort appears to have been made by either court to apply the holding of Reeves to the facts of this case in this unpublished opinion.

a. Plaintiff Has Established a Prima Facie Case of Retaliation Discrimination Herein:

Plaintiff a loyal, hardworking twelve year employee who was qualified for her position, opposed sex and retaliation discrimination, was retaliated against, and ultimately lost her job after her complaints of discrimination. Harnish presents ample evidence of the following oppositional activity by Harnish and its resultant retaliatory threats and actions:

- Harnish protested sexual harassment and retaliation conduct to Managers Wilkshire, McKanna and Culp numerous times prior to September 17, 1995; (17:4225, 4231; 18:4319)

- Harnish filed an internal complaint of sexual harassment on September 19, 1995;

- On October 10, 1995 Harnish had a meeting with

Managers Wilkshire and Knott wherein she complained, inter alia, about the progress of the sexual harassment investigation. She told Wilkshire that she might have to hire an attorney relating to the investigation and complained that he was treating her differently relating to shift swap polices. Manager Wilkshire called her a liar and stormed out of the meeting. (17: 4232, 4235). He also labeled her a troublemaker on at least four occasions. (17: 4218-4220)

• Manager McKanna confronted Harnish and told her that he knew she had filed a sex harassment complaint. He told her: "I resent that. Nobody has done that before on the ramp and you will regret that." He told her it could damage her career. (RE 55; 17:4233-4234; 18:4340, 4464-4465; 4624).

• After the rape, she threatened American Airlines Managers Hill and McKanna that ".... you're not going to get away with this." (18:4309, 4334,; 19:4524) Hill acknowledges McKanna told him that Harnish had threatened that she was going to sue American. (18:4387-4388, 4435)

• Harnish attempted to take her promotion and evaluation concerns up the management chain but her managers ignored her.

• Harnish then wrote an e-mail complaint to O'Hare and a meeting was set for June 28, 19996.

• The day before Harnish met with Vice President O'Hare, Manager Wilkshire threatened her that she needed to think twice about going to O'Hare and that if she went to see Don O'Hare that that would be a decision that "could ruin a career." He also reminded her she could have a long healthy career at American but that going to see Don O'Hare was "not a smart move." (18:4339-4330).

• On June 28, 1995, Harnish met with O'Hare and Human Resources Representative Barbara Landers. After receiving assurances that she would not lose her job, she lodged her complaints of sex and retaliation discrimination. (18:4270-4273).

b. A "Suspicion of Mendacity Exits Herein:

American does not seriously contest that Plaintiff has made out a prima facie case of retaliation discrimination herein. In this case, there is ample evidence from which the jury could find a "suspicion of mendacity" with regard to the reasons for Harnish's termination. First, American told Harnish that her termination was due "to the recent investigation." Then, in a termination letter, it stated that the discharge was due to Harnish's "judgment." In deposition, discharging official Wallace states that the reason for the discharge was alleged "dishonesty" or "lying" and filing a complaint with "ulterior motives." (RE 82; 18:4329, 4335; 19:4610).

However in its position paper filed with the United States Government's EEOC, American shifted its reasons for discharge yet again, this time stating the discharge was "based on the act of oral sex in public." (RE 80-81, 83-84; 19:4608-4609, 4612-4613). Essentially, American Airlines has presented at least two contradictory reasons for Harnish's termination: (1) to a governmental agency, the reason was for engaging in oral sex in public and not because of her filing her harassment complaint or her manner or method of doing so and (2) under oath the reason was for "lying" and filing a complaint with "ulterior motive."

The jury is certainly entitled to view all the evidence, including the evidence of the employer's shifting reason for termination, and find that, based on the evidence, the alleged reason for Harnish's termination is pretext and the real reason was retaliation for her prior opposition to sexual harassment conduct.

c. Plaintiff Presents Additional Evidence of Discrimination and Pretext Herein Including Retaliation Following Her Oppositional Activities:

As noted infra, Harnish also was subject to statements of retaliatory animus and threats of career harm and discharge for filing sexual harassment complaints including statements by McKanna and Wilkshire to the effect that her career could be ruined and statements by Manager Jerry Culp, that McKanna, Hill and Wilkshire were attempting to get her fired. [RE 56-57; 17:4233-4234; 18:4339-4340, 4464-4465; 19:4625-4626]. Indeed, the day before Harnish met with Vice President O'Hare, Manager Wilkshire threatened her that she needed to think twice about going to O'Hare and that if she went to see Don O'Hare that that would be a decision that "could ruin a career." He also reminded her she could have a long healthy career at American but that going to see Don O'Hare was "not a smart move." (18:4339-4330).

d. Additional Evidence of Pretext -- Timing Evidence:

Close timing between an employee's protected activity and an adverse action against her may provide a sufficient "causal connection" necessary for a showing of retaliation. Armstrong v. City of Dallas, 997 F.2d 62, 67 (5th Circuit 1993); Payne v. McLemore's Wholesale & Retail, 654 F.2d 1130 n. 13 (5th Cir. 1991). The Fifth Circuit has recently reversed a district court's granting of summary judgment on a retaliation case, indicating that "suspicious timing," in the context of viewing "the totality of this evidence," may be sufficient to survive summary judgment. Shackelford v. Deloitte & Touche, L.L.P., 190 F.3d 398 (5th Cir. 1999).

Harnish presents striking timing factors similar to the Shackelford case. On June 25, 1996, Harnish requested a meeting with Vice President O'Hare regarding "sexual abuse" on the DFW ramp. (RE 64; 17:4036). On June 27, 1996, Harnish was warned by Manager Wilkshire that she needed to think twice about going to O'Hare and that such a move could "ruin a career" and was "not a smart move." (18:4339-4330) The next day, Harnish Met with O'Hare. (18:4270-4271) A few weeks later, Harnish was subjected to a one sided and sexist interrogation at the hands of American Airlines interrogators. Then, within three weeks, Harnish was terminated.

e. Other Evidence of Discrimination and Pretext:

In addition to the shifting reasons for discharge, the threats of retaliation, the suspicious timing, Harnish further presents evidence of prior sexual harassment that was ignored by American.

She further presents evidence that the sexual harassment investigation assertedly relied upon by the discharging official was one-sided and tainted by sexist bias.

Moreover, even given the bias of the interrogators against her and for her male Managers, the interrogators did not come up with any evidence substantiating Manager Hill's claims that she had had oral sex with him, one of the asserted reasons for discharge. In fact, the disinterested witnesses all deny that any such incident had ever occurred. Indeed the description of the incident is nigh near physically impossible and a fact finder might well find it incredulous that anyone believed Hill's version of events much less American Airlines.

Lastly, the favoritism and unremitting financial support that American showed so that Hill could fight Harnish's charges after the discharge also shows the unremitting bias of American Airlines.

Therefore, Harnish has both presented a prima facie case, and substantial evidence from which a jury may conclude that American Airline's purported reason for her termination was pretextual. It strains credulity to simply "buy off" on Defendant's version of events herein without trial.

B. On Summary Judgement, the Lower Courts Violated the Seventh Amendment and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 When They Classified Retaliation Plaintiffs into Two Categories: Those That Make a "Truthful, Sincere Complaint" of Discrimination and Those That Assertedly Make "Manipulative or Insincere Complaints" and then Denied Title VII's Retaliation Protection and the Right to a Jury Trial to Plaintiff Whom They Implicitly Categorized as Belonging to the Latter Category:

1. The Court's Retaliation Findings Herein Rely on Improper Credibility Findings:

In granting summary judgment, the district court held that "Plaintiff has failed to show that she would not have been terminated but for her protected conduct, which would have comprised the making of a truthful, sincere complaint of discrimination" to American. The district court held on summary judgment -- without benefit of citation -- that "Title VII cannot be read to protect employees who make manipulative or insincere complaints to their employers." (RE 34-35). The lower court held that "American reasonably concluded after a thorough investigation that such complaints were less than sincere, not completely truthful, and therefore seriously misguided given their potentially damaging effect on the reputations of American and Mike Hill."

In essence, the District Court has credited American's version of events and factually makes the determination that her complaints of sexual assault were "less than sincere", "seriously misguided", "not completely truthful", and "manipulative or insincere complaints." The Fifth Circuit summarily affirmed by unpublished opinion.

In so doing, the lower courts appears to divest from the jury its proper role in making credibility determinations with respect to her complaints including her complaint of sexual assault by Manager Hill, his counter assertion that she engaged in oral sex and the underpinning good faith nature of her complaint of sexual harassment.

2. The Seventh Amendment and Rule 56 preclude Credibility Assessments and/or Balancing of Conflicting Evidence:

The Seventh Amendment guarantees "the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." U.S. Const. Amend. VII. Instead of heeding that Amendment and resolving the contradictions in favor of non-movant Harnish, both lower courts appeared to have "taken sides" in an apparent improper balancing of the evidence. In doing so, Harnish has come up short.

Thus, it is clear that some witnesses are lying in circumstances in which Defendants' witnesses readily have motivations to lie - Manager Hill to escape a claim of sexual assault and harassment, Vice President Wallace and the other Managers to escape claims of sexual harassment and retaliation. As this Court noted in discounting the value of testimony of company officials in Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 468 (1962): "it is readily apparent that each of these persons was an interested party"

Where, as here, discharging official Wallace's testimony as to the reasons for discharge is contrasted squarely by the Employer's own position paper to the EEOC which discounts Wallace's reasons and give an entirely different reason for the discharge -- her alleged engagement in oral sex -- and where that incident of alleged oral sex is denied by Plaintiff and two disinterested witnesses, the implicit balancing of credibility at the summary judgment stage in the Employer's favor is especially egregious.

This is error as the contradictions in the evidence in this case on material issues are sufficient to preclude summary judgment under Rule 56. American should not be allowed to deprive Harnish of her jury trial by an overuse -- indeed a downright misuse -- of the summary judgment standards herein. Such crediting of the Employer's version of events flies squarely in the face of Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-253 (1986); Celotex Corporation v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317 (1986) and Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S.Ct. 1348 (1986) which mandate that only the evidence of the non-movant and uncontradicted, unimpeached evidence of the movant is to be considered.[4] It is thus improper for the reviewing jurist to choose

[4] The over utilization of summary judgment has been criticized in the context of employment discrimination cases. See Patricia M. Wald, Summary Judgment at Sixty, 76 Tex. L. Rev. 1897 (1998); Ann C. McGinley, Credulous Courts and the Tortured Trilogy: The Improper Use of Summary Judgment in Title VII and ADEA Cases, 34 B.C.L.Rev. 203 up sides by casting Plaintiff at the summary judgment stage as one of a group of employees who has made a "manipulative or insincere complaints to their employers."

Such a determination is also inconsistent with this Court's prior rulings which recognize the constitutional and Rule 56 mandate: e.g. inferences to be drawn from the facts must be left to the jury. See: Sioux City and Pacific R.R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U.S. 657, 664 ("It is assumed that twelve men know more of the common affairs of life than does one man; that they can draw wiser and safer conclusions from admitted facts thus occurring than can a single judge"); Hunt v. Cromartie, 526 U.S. 541, 119 S.Ct. 1545, 1552 (1999) (summary judgment not appropriate where reasonable inference from undisputed facts can lead to either of two conclusions.)

C. Defendants Are Not Entitled as a Matter of Law to Discharge Sexual Harassment Complainants Who Assertedly Make "Misrepresentations" to the Employer Even if they Do so in "Good Faith."

Implicit in the Court's ruling is an apparent approval of the Company's assertion that if it does not believe a sex harassment complainant fully, it is allowed to discharge her for the "offense." Such a ruling flies in the face of this Court's holding in NLRB v. Burnup & Sims, Inc., 379 U.S. 21, 23 (1964).

In that case, this Court rejected wholeheartedly the Employer's discharge defense that it had a "good faith" belief that the employee who was engaged in protected conduct had in actual fact engaged in misconduct. In rejecting the defense, this Court noted:

> In sum, 8(a)(1) is violated if it is shown that the discharged employee was at the time engaged in a protected activity, that the employer knew it was such, that the basis of the discharge was an alleged act of misconduct in the course of that activity and that the employee was not, in fact, guilty of that misconduct.

> That rule seems to us to be in conformity with the policy behind 8(a)(1). Otherwise the protected activity would lose some of its immunity, since the example of employees who are discharged on false charges would or might have a deterrent effect on other employees. ....A protected activity acquires a precarious status if innocent employees can be discharged while engaging in it, even though the employer acts in good faith. It is the tendency of those discharges to weaken or destroy 8(a)(1) right that is controlling.

Further, the ruling herein appears to ignore the standard for evaluation of protected oppositional conduct held by the Circuit Courts including the Fifth Circuit in the enforcement of Title VII's "participation clause." Thus, as the Fifth Circuit has long held:

> To effectuate the policies of Title VII and to avoid the chilling effect that would otherwise arise, we are compelled to conclude that a plaintiff can establish a prima facie case of retaliatory discharge under the opposition clause of section 704(a) if he shows that he had a reasonable belief that the employer was engaged in unlawful employment practices. Payne v. McLemore's Wholesale Stores, 654 F.2d 1139 (5th Cir. 1981). See also De Anda v. St. Joseph Hospital, 671 F.2d 850, 853 n.2 (5th Cir. 1982).

In Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 411 F.2d 998, 1003, 1007 (5th Cir. 1969) the Fifth Court held as a matter of law that an employee that files an EEOC charge that contains material that the Employer views as scandalous, malicious or libelous is not stripped from the wide range of protection of the anti-retaliation statute because the employee is exercising a protected right under Title VII when he so files a charge.

In finding retaliation, this Court noted that "the employer may not take it on itself to determine the correctness or consequences of the filing. Pettway, 411 F.2d at 1005.

Absent such protections, a company official can now attempt to act as "judge, jury and executioner" holding the power of a job over the heads of victims of sexual harassment who file internal complaints. Requiring complainants such as Harnish to lodge such complaints first with her employer but to then subject her to the peril of job loss if management chooses to disbelieve her or accuse her of "lying" or "misrepresentations" in her rendition of the traumatic events surrounding harassment allegations is simply too high a price for an employee to pay to enforce our nation's civil rights laws.[5] It should be the employer -- not the employee -- who acts at its peril by discharging a sexual harassment victim that it believes has lied. To do otherwise would be to allow the fox to guard the hen house.

D. Material Issues of Fact are Raised as to The Company's Liability For Sexual Harassment Conduct of its Manager When the Manager Engages in a Violent Rape of the Employee Off-premises and Then Uses his Managerial Power to Prevents her Promotion by Use of the Company's Performance Evaluation System?

1. The rape alone created a hostile and abusive environment

Manager Hill's vicious sexual attack created a hostile and abusive environment for Harnish.[6] Even a single incident of sexual assault can sufficiently alter the conditions of the victim's employment and clearly creates an abusive working environment.

[5]It should be remembered that sexual harassment allegations are by their nature "he said/she said" allegations notoriously difficult to prove.

[6] Of course, Plaintiff also alleges that the sexual harassment conduct that occurred prior to the 300 day charge filing period is also actionable under the "continuing violation" theory.

As this Court has noted, actionable harassment encompasses all forms of conduct that unreasonably interfere with an individual's work performance or create an intimidating, hostile or sexually offensive work environment. Meritor Savings Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 64 (1986). Harnish suffered both physically and emotionally as a result of the attack. The fear engendered by the attack is one of the reasons she did not file an EEOC charge more promptly.

A trier of fact could also reasonably infer that Hill's non recommendation for promotion and refusal to complete the personnel evaluation form which stymied her promotion chances were motivated by gender and retaliatory animus as well as motivated by the fact that Harnish had previously spurned Hill's unwanted sexual advances. The jury can infer that these actions constituted tangible employment actions as did her discharge.

Moreover, a trier of fact could reasonably infer that Hill raped Harnish in part to get back at her for turning in sexual harassers at American of whom he clearly was one. In this case, it is the jury's call to determine whether the low evaluation, thwarted evaluation form and eventual termination of Harnish were caused by the nexus of her earlier complaints of harassment.

Furthermore, the treatment of Hill and Harnish following the investigation provides evidence of the company's sexist bias and gender animosity. While Harnish was terminated with no benefits following the investigation, Hill was awarded 52 weeks of severance pay. Furthermore, American has fronted the costs incurred by Hill as a defendant in this litigation, in amounts totaling more than $250,000. This provides further evidence that American is willing to protect its male employees over its female employees.

E. The Sexual Assault of Harnish Constitutes Actionable Conduct Under Title VII:

American argues that it cannot be liable under Title VII for the rape of Harnish because the event occurred at a private residence while both Hill and Harnish were off-duty. . This argument is flawed. The location of the harassment has never been the sole factor in determining whether an employer is held liable for the harassment. Employers are not insulated from liability under Title VII solely because the harassment took place off-duty or outside of the employer's immediate premises. Rather the courts look to see whether there is a direct nexus between the off-premises harassment and the workplace.

Two of this Court's well-known sexual harassment cases involve off-premises conduct. In Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 912 F. Supp. 1101 (N.D. Ill. 1996), a significant amount of the sexually harassing conduct occurred in restaurants and hotels. In Vinson v. Taylor, 23 FEP 37 (D.D.C. 1980), the case underlying Meritor Savings Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57 (1986), the first sexual assault of the plaintiff occurred in a hotel following a non-work related social dinner. Had location - rather than agency responsibility principles - been the motivating factor in determination of liability, this Court would have so indicated in either Vinson or Meritor. It did not because location simply is not the dispositive issue in determination of liability - it is the relationship of the harasser to the victim and the impact of the harassment of the victim on her at her workplace.

There are numerous factors which together demonstrate that there was a direct nexus between Harnish's employment and the events leading up to the rape. Harnish felt compelled to attend the day's social activities in order to maintain a good working relationship with her supervisors McKanna and Hill. (R. 18: 4275-4276). Hill and McKanna were, in fact, insistent that Harnish return to their house to continue the party. (R. 18: 4275-4276). Also, Harnish had observed that those employees who were favored by McKanna and Hill obtained preferred job assignments and thus received enhanced opportunities for promotion. (R. 17: 4239, 18: 4337-4339, 4473-4474). Furthermore, after Harnish received a lower than expected performance review from her attacker six months after the rape, Harnish realized that her job and her opportunities for advancement were being jeopardized by her harasser. (R.18: 4261-4264, 4267, 19: 4628-4629).

Other courts have held that off-premises conduct may form the basis of a sexual harassment claim. In addition to the Supreme Court cases previously cited, see, for example, Bowers v. Radiological Society of North America, Inc., 101 F. Supp. 2d 691, 693 (N.D. Ill. 2000). In Bowers, the plaintiff was offered a job and a place to live by her supervisor. After accepting, the plaintiff began to experience sexual advances at home from her supervisor, which she rejected. Id. at 693. The supervisor then gave the plaintiff a low performance evaluation when the plaintiff moved out, and eventually fired her. Id. The court found that the events at home were intertwined with the events at the workplace and could form the basis of a Title VII claim.

F. In light of the grant of certiorari in National R.R. Passenger Corp. d/b/a Amtrak v. Morgan, U.S. No. 00-1814, cert. granted 6/25/01, to determine the applicability of the "continuing violation theory" is Plaintiff entitled to trial on all of her sexual harassment allegations including those occurring more than 300 days prior to her EEOC charge filing where she claims equitable estoppel principles apply?

Plaintiff complains of sexual harassment conduct relating to Bowers, Wilkshire, Hill and McKanna prior to the 300 statutory filing period. This Court has recognized and applied the doctrine of equitable tolling to toll filing deadlines in Title VII cases. Zipes v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 455 U.S. 385, 398, 102 S.Ct. 1127, 1135, 71 L.Ed.2d 234 (1982). Indeed, this Court has recently granted certiorari to a case to resolve conflicts among the circuits with respect to the application of the continuing violation theory. National R.R. Passenger Corp. d/b/a Amtrak v. Morgan, U.S. No. 00-1814, cert. granted 6/25/01.

It is well settled that the purpose of the continuing violation doctrine is to allow aggrieved persons "the maximum benefit of the law." (Zipes, 455 U.S. supra at 395.) In Zipes, supra at 398, the Court pointed out that:

By holding compliance with the filing period to be > not a jurisdictional prerequisite to filing a Title VII suit, but a requirement subject to a waiver as well as tolling when equity so requires, we honor the remedial purpose of the legislation as a whole without negating the particular purpose of the filing requirement, to give prompt notice to the employer.

Thus, as this Court has long recognized, the requirement that a complainant file a charge with the EEOC within the 300-day statutory filing period is "subject to waiver, estoppel, and equitable tolling." Zipes, 455 U.S. supra at 393; See also, Irwin v. U.S. Department of Veteran's Affairs, 498 U.S. 89 (1990); Baldwin County Medical Center v. Brown, 466 U.S. 147 (1984).

Lower Courts including the Fifth Circuit has noted, the filing deadline is subject to equitable modification, i.e., tolling or estoppel, when necessary to effect the remedial purposes of the statute. Clark v. Resistoflex Co., A Div. Of Unidynamics Corp., 854 F.2d 762, 765 (5th Cir. 1988). Equitable tolling is permitted if the interests of justice so require and there is no prejudice to the defendant. Pioneer Investment Servs. Co. v. Brunswick Assoc. Ltd. Partnership, 507 U.S. 380, 113 S.Ct. 1489, 123 L.Ed.2d 74 (1993).

This case presents a compelling argument for the equitable modification of the 300 day limit due to the egregiousness of the Employer's conduct. Of course, the issue of whether the doctrine of equitable tolling applies involves questions of fact. See Rowe v. Sullivan, 967 F.2d 186, 191 (5th Cir. 1992). Such factual questions make summary judgment particularly inappropriate. In Rhodes v. Guiberson Oil Tools Div., 927 F.2d 876, 881 (5th Cir. 1991). Id. See also Pruet Prod. Co. v. Ayles, 784 F.2d 1275, 1280 (5th Cir. 1986).

In the instant case, under a continuing violation "equitable estoppel" theory, Plaintiff asserts that she is entitled to recover for sexual harassment conduct that occurred 300 days prior to EEOC charge filing as she asserts that she was prevented from earlier filing, inter alia, because she feared retaliation because of Defendant's retaliatory threats of discharge and coercive acts including violent rape by one of its Managers. Plaintiff asserts that several Managers affirmatively sought to dissuade her from exercise of her rights including Managers Hill, McKanna, Culp and Wilkshire. Such repeated threats of physical and career harm - coupled with actual physical harm and actual career damage for having filed an internal harassment complaint - are certainly stronger than the conduct in Zipes.

In addition to the threats of physical and career harm - as well as actual physical harm at the hands of Manager Hill - American can also be said to have "lulled" her into inaction and delay in the filing of her EEOC charge during the pendency of the initial Bowers sexual harassment investigation. Thus, in September 1995, Harnish was informed that American would investigate her claims and get back to her within 10 days. [R. 17-4228, 4242; 19-4537, 4630] The investigation, however, took closer to four months. In the meantime, the 300 days were running on the time in which she had to file her EEOC charge.

Plaintiffs are encouraged - if not required - in sexual harassment cases to first file an internal complaint and allow the Employer to investigate. While the investigation was pending there was the hope that at its conclusion American would take strong remedies that would stop harassment and retaliation and obviate the need for the EEOC filing.

American should not be now heard to argue that some of Ms. Harnish's sexual harassment allegations are time barred when its Managers threatened her with harm if she filed pursued sexual harassment allegations and otherwise discouraged her from complaining of sexual harassment, and then assured her that they were performing a timely investigation, with the implied hope of an effective remedy. Harnish had the right to wait to see if American would handle her complaints in an adequate fashion and American should not be heard to now complain for the period of the pendency of the internal sexual harassment investigation.

Of course, while Harnish was waiting for such investigation, an American Airline Manager, Mike Hill, brutally raped her after his roommate Manager McKanna had threatened her and after Hill himself had taunted her that she thought she was "too good." That rape rendered her emotionally incapable of taking further action against American. [R. 18-4486-4488; 19-4621-4622].

In Stoll v. Runyon, 165 F.3d 1238, 1242-43 (9th Cir. 1999), the court held that the Plaintiff was entitled to equitable tolling because the intense and continued sexual harassment she had endured at her place of employ, including being raped by one of her supervisors, had left her so traumatized that she could not function with respect to the lawsuit during the suit filing period. Id. Such precedent is certainly applicable herein. See also, Martin v. Nannie & the Newborns, Inc., 3 F.3d 1410 (10th Cir. 1993), in which the Tenth Circuit reversed summary judgment for the employer in a sexual harassment case in which the plaintiff had been raped by her supervisor. Much later, after her termination, the plaintiff filed a charge of discrimination, and the Court held the earlier events including the rape were timely pursuant to the continuing violation theory.

The procedural requirements of Title VII should not be allowed to become so formidable and inflexible as to preclude the aggrieved employee from receiving relief from employment discrimination. A balancing of the equities strongly suggests that this court should preclude summary judgment on the timeliness of Plaintiff's charge.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT AMERICAN AIRLINES, INC.'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT
(Filed July 13, 2000)

Pending before the Court is Defendant American Airlines, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment, filed April 3, 2000 [doc. # 111-1]. Having carefully considered the motion, response, and reply, the Court finds that the motion should be GRANTED. The Court concludes that no genuine issue of material fact exists with respect to any of Plaintiff's claims. Plaintiff's loosely organized arguments and evidence intertwine fact with rumor, speculation, and groundless opinion. The Court finds that only a brief discussion and statement of findings are necessary.[9]

This highly contested action involves an allegation of employment discrimination based on sex. In scattershot fashion,

[9]The Court notes the 41 objections to Plaintiff's summary judgment evidence, filed by American Airlines on June 2, 2000. Although the Court opines that most of those objections should be sustained, the Court nevertheless considered all of Plaintiff's proffered evidence in deciding to grant summary judgment.

Plaintiff has alleged an assortment of harassment claims against virtually all of her male supervisors and a number of her male co-workers at American Airlines ("American"). The centerpiece of her case is an allegations that she was raped by defendant Mike Hill, another employee of American, at his home on December 3, 1995, after an afternoon and evening of mutual fraternizing with friends and fellow employees outside the workplace. Plaintiff did not report this incident to American for six months. She came forward with her complaint only after she received an unanticipated "satisfactory" performance rating from Hill, who by that time was her direct supervisor. After an investigation conducted by American, both Plaintiff and Hill were terminated from their positions. American concluded that Plaintiff exercised poor judgment and seriously mischaracterized the nature of her allegation against Hill.[10] Hill was terminated because he became sexually involved with a subordinate and nevertheless participated in the subordinate's performance review.

Having reviewed the summary judgment evidence, the Court makes the following findings:

1. Plaintiff cannot recover under Title VII for events occurring before October 4, 1995, 300 days before she filed her initial charge of discrimination. See 42 U.S.C. §2000e-5(e)(1). The Court finds no grounds to apply the doctrines of equitable tolling or estoppel.

2. None of the alleged events occurring after October 4, 1995, were sufficiently severe or pervasive to assert a successful claim for hostile working environment under Title VII.

3. The alleged sexual assault of Plaintiff by Mike Hill is not actionable under Title VII. The incident occurred at Hill's

[10]After interviewing Plaintiff, Hill, and a number of witnesses, American found that Plaintiff had omitted crucial details surrounding the events of December 3, 1995, suggesting that the sexual encounter was consensual.

home, while both parties were off-duty. The Court finds no meaningful connection between the workplace environment at American and a voluntary decision among employees to socialize off-premises after work.

4. Plaintiff has failed to direct to Court to any competent summary judgment evidence to show that she was qualified and applied for any promotions during the statutory period. Additionally, Plaintiff made no mention of the denial of any employment opportunities when she filed her initial complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"). Plaintiff thus may not recover under Title VII for any alleged failure to promote or denial of advancement opportunities.

5. Plaintiff cannot recover under Title VII based upon the "satisfactory" performance rating she received from Mike Hill. Particularly when such rating is consistent with prior ratings, a determination that an employee's performance is satisfactory is not an adverse employment action.

6. Plaintiff has provided the Court with no credible reason to doubt American's legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for her termination. Although a causal relationship certainly exists between Plaintiff's complaints to American and her ultimate termination, American reasonably concluded after a thorough investigation that such complaints were less than sincere, not completely truthful, and therefore seriously misguided given their potentially damaging effect on the reputation of American and Mike Hill. Plaintiff has offered no evidence to suggest that American's proferred reason was a pretext for retaliation. While Plaintiff does not need to show evidence of actual discriminatory intent to survive a motion for summary judgment, she does need to come forward with sufficient evidence to find that American's asserted justification is false. See Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Pros., 120 S.Ct. 2097 (2000). Plaintiff has failed to show that she would not have been terminated but for her protected conduct, which would have comprised the making of a truthful, sincere complaint of discrimination to American. Title VII cannot be read to protect employees who make manipulative or insincere complaints to their employers.

7. Plaintiff's tort claims are barred insofar as they are based on conduct occurring before June 1, 1996, two years before Plaintiff filed this action. The Court has already held that there are no grounds to apply the continuing tort doctrine.

8. Plaintiff's claims for invasion of privacy are wholly without merit. The Court concludes that American's investigation of Plaintiff following her initial complaint in no way constituted an intrusion upon her solitude, seclusion, or private affairs. Additionally, no highly intimate or embarrassing facts about Plaintiff were disseminated by American to the public at large.

9. Plaintiff has offered no evidence to suggest that American engaged in any "extreme and outrageous" conduct sufficient to prevail on a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

10. Plaintiff has offered no evidence other than unsupported, conclusory statements regarding her claim for false imprisonment.

Therefore, for the reasons stated above, it is ORDERED that defendant American Airlines, Inc.'s motion for summary judgment is GRANTED. All claims asserted against defendant American Airlines in this cause are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

SIGNED July 13, 2000.
